INTRODUCTION.....2

ARGUMENT .....3

I. THE FIRST AMENDMENT CATEGORICALLY BARS CIVIL CLAIMS
CHALLENGING A CHURCH’S OR CLERGYMAN’S DETERMINATION OF A PERSON’S MEMBERSHIP STATUS WITHIN THE FAITH.....5

II. THE FIRST AMENDMENT PRECLUDES THE IMPOSITION OF A FIDUCIARY
DUTY BASED ON RELIGIOUS DOCTRINE OR ECCLESIASTICAL DUTIES .....7

A. Imposing a Secular Fiduciary Relationship Based on Religious Facts Violates the First Amendment.....7

B. Imposing a Legal Standard of Care that Clerics Owe to Congregants Violates the First Amendment.....8

C. A Person Who Is Both a Clergy Member and a Secular Professional
Can Be Held Liable for Breach of Fiduciary Duties Arising Out of His Role as a Professional But Not for Duties Allegedly Arising Out of His Role as a Clergy Member.....10

D. Serious Cases of Sexual Misconduct by Clergy are Better Remedied
Through Claims for Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress.....13

III. CHURCHES AND RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS ARE NOT LIABLE FOR SEXUAL OR INTENTIONAL TORTS COMMITTED BY AGENTS AND VOLUNTEERS ...14

IV. THE FIRST AMENDMENT BARS OR LIMITS CLAIMS AGAINST A CHURCH FOR NEGLIGENT HIRING, RETENTION, OR SUPERVISION OF A CLERGY MEMBER OR UNPAID VOLUNTEER .....17

A. The First Amendment Bars a Claim Against a Church for the Negligent Hiring or Retention of a Clergy Member or Volunteer Who Performs Spiritual Functions Within a Church.....18

B. The First Amendment Bars a Claim Against a Church for the Negligent Supervision of a Clergy Member or Unpaid Volunteer,

15 BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS

16 The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (“LDS Church” or “Church”) is 17 an unincorporated religious association headquartered in Salt Lake City, Utah.<sup>1</sup> 18 Church membership exceeds 13 million people, with more than 27,000 congregations 19 throughout the world. Our most basic beliefs include the principles of religious 20 freedom and toleration: “We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God 21 according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, 22 let them worship how, where or what they may.” Article of Faith, No. 11.

23 The LDS Church is deeply concerned that the law in Nevada accommodate and 24 respect the autonomy and freedom that the First Amendment enshrines for all faith

25 <sup>1</sup>In addition to terms like “religious associations” and “religious organizations,” the 26 term “churches” will also be used inclusively in this brief to denote religious 27 institutions and communities—be they, strictly speaking, churches, synagogues, 28 mosques, ashrams, or ministries of any type. Similarly, terms like “clergyman” and “minister” are used to denote any person within a religious community whose ecclesiastical position is “important to the spiritual and pastoral mission of the church.” EEOC v. Catholic Univ. of Am., 83 F.3d 455, 461 (D.C.Cir. 1996).

1 communities. Even as it unequivocally condemns abuse and exploitation of any kind, 2 the LDS Church must nevertheless caution against broad-brush approaches to 3 liability—such as those advocated by Appellant here—that fail to account for vital 4 constitutional rights. Subjecting religious organizations to broad tort rules that were 5 created for unrelated secular contexts will directly burden the exercise of religion, 6 excessively entangle civil courts in religious affairs, and inevitably preference one 7 faith group over another.

8 Each of the questions this Court has ordered to be addressed implicates highly 9 sensitive issues of religious freedom. The answers this Court provides will have 10 serious implications for the autonomy of the LDS Church and the religious exercise of 11 thousands of its members in Nevada. The LDS Church has the highest interest in 12 seeing those issues fully briefed and properly resolved.

13 INTRODUCTION

14 Churches and the clergy members who serve them are not ordinary businesses 15 or professionals. The state properly regulates the structure and activities of secular 16 businesses and their agents through common law claims that compel conformity to 17 social norms. But churches and clergy are different. While not immune from tort 18 liability, they cannot be subjected to all of the same tort claims available against 19 secular businesses and their agents. The First Amendment guarantees faith 20 communities the autonomy to define and govern themselves in ecclesiastical matters 21 free from the state’s supervision or undue interference. It thus bars certain tort claims 22 that would entangle civil courts or juries in matters of church doctrine, polity, 23 ecclesiastical duty, or the conformity of members or clergy to religious standards. To 24 paraphrase the co-author of Prosser’s preeminent hornbook on torts, the First 25 Amendment requires that courts use “Surgical Instruments, Not Machetes,” when 26 remedying civil wrongs allegedly committed by clergy or churches. See VICTOR E.
27 SCHWARTZ & LEAH LORBER, Defining the Duty of Religious Institutions to Protect 28

1 Others: Surgical Instruments, Not Machetes, Are Required, 74 U. Cin. L. Rev. 11 2 (2005).

3 Such precision is now required of this Court as it establishes Nevada's law in 4 the five constitutionally sensitive areas indentified in its November 3, 2008 Order of 5 Limited Remand ("Order"). As we demonstrate below, several of the causes of action
6 referenced in the Order and advanced by Appellant Theressa "Zissa" Janetta Ramani 7 ("Ramani") are barred by the First Amendment or by established common law 8 principles. Claims attacking a church's decision to investigate a member's religious 9 status within the faith (issue #1) or that seek to impose secular fiduciary duties on 10 purely religious relationships (issue #2) or challenge a church's selection or retention 11 of its clergy (issue #5) violate the First Amendment by excessively entangling civil 12 courts and juries in ecclesiastical matters. As to vicarious liability (issues #3 & #4), 13 nearly all courts hold that churches are not vicariously liable for the sexual 14 misconduct of clergy or volunteers because such conduct lies far outside the course 15 and scope of any agency relationship. This Court should reject such claims.

16 By contrast, this Court could craft a constitutionally appropriate claim against a 17 church for failing to supervise a clergy member (issue #5) by expressly limiting the 18 claim to cases where the church disregarded actual notice of the danger. See Gibson 19 v. Brewer, 952 S.W.2d 239 (Mo. 1997). Through such a claim—and others like 20 battery and intentional infliction of emotional distress that generally do not implicate 21 First Amendment concerns—this Court can satisfy the need for a remedy in egregious 22 cases of clergy misconduct without infringing on the First Amendment rights of 23 religious organizations.

24 ARGUMENT

25 The issues before the Court must be considered and resolved in light of 26 fundamental First Amendment principles. One such principle is that the state cannot 27 entangle itself in religious affairs. See Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612-13 28 (1971). A closely related one is that government cannot become involved in the 1 interpretation of religious doctrine, practices, and beliefs. Since Watson v. Jones, 80 2 U.S. (13 Wall.) 679 (1871), the United States Supreme Court has repeatedly held that 3 “civil courts exercise no jurisdiction” over “a matter which concerns theological 4 controversy.” Serbian E. Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich, 426 U.S. 696, 713-14 5 (1976) (quoting Watson, 80 U.S. at 733-34). Civil courts cannot “engage in the 6 forbidden process of interpreting and weighing church doctrine.” Presbyterian 7 Church v. Mary Elizabeth Blue Hull Mem’l Presbyterian Church, 393 U.S. 440, 451

8 (1969). Indeed, such a process “can play no role in any ... judicial proceedings” 9 because it unconstitutionally “inject[s] the civil courts into substantive ecclesiastical 10 matters.” Id. at 450-51 (emphasis in original). Hence, the First Amendment bars 11 courts from undertaking “an analysis or examination of ecclesiastical polity or 12 doctrine in settling [civil] disputes.” Jones v. Wolf, 443 U.S. 595, 605 (1979).

13         The High Court has also held that churches must have the “power to decide for 14 themselves, free from state interference, matters of church government as well as 15 those of faith and doctrine.” Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral, 344 U.S. 94, 116 16 (1952); see Bell v. Presbyterian Church, 126 F.3d 328, 331 (4th Cir. 1997) (quoting 17 Kedroff). This rule of judicial noninterference “applies with equal force to church 18 disputes over church polity and church administration.” Serbian E. Orthodox Diocese 19 v. Milivojevich, 426 U.S. 696, 710 (1976). Civil courts cannot adjudicate “a matter 20 which concerns ... church discipline, ecclesiastical government, or the conformity of 21 the members of the church to the standard of morals required of them.” Id. at 713-14.

22         These constitutional first principles limit the kinds of claims that can be 23 brought against clergy and religious organizations. Tort claims that require civil 24 courts to entangle themselves in the examination of religious doctrines, beliefs, or 25 polity, or that interfere in church governance, are unconstitutional. An example 26 directly relevant to this case is the claim of clergy malpractice, which courts have 27 universally rejected. See Franco v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 21 28 P.3d 198, 204 (Utah 2001) (“courts throughout the United States have uniformly

1 rejected claims for clergy malpractice under the First Amendment”). That claim 2 cannot be adjudicated because it unconstitutionally “require[s] courts to establish a 3 standard of reasonable care for religious practitioners practicing their respective faiths, 4 which necessarily involves the interpretation of [religious] doctrine.” Amato v.
5 Greenquist, 679 N.E.2d 446, 450 (Ill. Ct. App. 1997); see H.R.B. v. J.L.G., 913
6 S.W.2d 92, 98 (Mo. App. 1995) (adjudication of clergy malpractice claims “would 7 require courts to define and express the standard of care followed by a reasonable 8 clergy of the particular faith involved, which in turn would require the Court” to 9 examine and interpret religious doctrines, beliefs and practices).

10 As explained below, these constitutional principles bar or limit many of the 11 claims referenced in the Court’s Order. They do not, however, preclude meaningful 12 relief in cases of serious clergy misconduct.

13 I.

14 THE FIRST AMENDMENT CATEGORICALLY BARS CIVIL CLAIMS 15 CHALLENGING A CHURCH’S OR CLERGYMAN’S DETERMINATION 16 OF A PERSON’S MEMBERSHIP STATUS WITHIN THE FAITH

17 The first issue in the Order is whether it would violate the “First Amendment’s 18 excessive entanglement doctrine” for a civil court to adjudicate Ramani’s “claim that 19 [Chabad of Summerlin, Inc., Rabbi Schanowitz, and Rabbi Harlig] negligently and 20 intentionally inquired into whether [she] was Jewish.” Order at 2-3. It 21 unquestionably does. Whether Ramani is Jewish—and, more broadly, when it is 22 appropriate for a religious organization to inquire into a person’s eligibility to be a 23 member of the faith—are quintessentially religious questions. Tellingly, the inquiry 24 into Ramani’s Jewishness was ultimately heard and decided by an esteemed rabbinical 25 court. Compl. ¶¶ 51, 53. Ramani’s claim requires a court to second-guess that purely ecclesiastical determination.

26 This is precisely the sort of religious dispute that the First Amendment 27 precludes civil courts from adjudicating. To permit such a claim would directly 28 entangle the court in the interpretation of religious doctrine and displace the formal

1 and informal ecclesiastical structures within a religious organization for resolving 2 such issues. Questions of membership in a particular faith are inherently religious.
3 This Court should expressly acknowledge that churches have a First Amendment right 4 to determine the eligibility of their members for purely ecclesiastical benefits, such as 5 receiving sacraments and enjoying continuing membership, without fear of civil 6 liability—even if such determinations cause embarrassment or loss of social status.
7 See Paul v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Soc’y, 819 F.2d 875, 883-84 (9th Cir. 1987) 8 (First Amendment precludes a former Jehovah’s Witness from recovering damages for 9 injuries arising from the church practice of shunning former members); Guinn v.
10 Church of Christ, 775 P.3d 766, 775 (Okl. 1989) (First Amendment bars claims 11 against church leaders for acts undertaken to discipline a member of the 12 congregation); see also Lewis v. Holy Spirit Ass’n for Unification of World 13 Christianity, 589 F. Supp. 10, 12 (D. Mass. 1983) (“conditions of membership in a 14 religious organization are generally not subject to judicial review”).

15       Indeed, claims of this sort are nothing more than the uniformly rejected claim of 16 clergy malpractice. See Franco, 21 P.3d at 204. The core of the claim is the non-17 justiciable assertion that the ecclesiastical defendant failed to exercise its religious 18 authority in accordance with proper religious standards or motives. See Br. App. 12- 19 13 (asserting that “Ms. Ramani was entitled to have a jury or the court hear evidence 20 of how such [an] inquiry [into her Jewishness] was made” by the religious 21 respondents). Such claims impermissibly require the court (or jury) to interpret 22 religious doctrine. That advocates can label the claims “a secular dispute” (Br. App.
23 11) changes nothing.<sup>2</sup> See Franco, 21 P.3d at 204 (labels irrelevant). They are claims 24 for clergy malpractice and thus barred.<sup>3</sup>

25 _____
26 <sup>2</sup>Adjudicating Ramani’s legal challenge to the ecclesiastical determination of her 27 religious membership status would inevitably entangle this Court in ecclesiastical 28 matters contrary to the First Amendment and, moreover, would emphatically not be among the kinds of “secular disputes involving religious institutions” that “can be

THE FIRST AMENDMENT PRECLUDES THE IMPOSITION OF A FIDUCIARY DUTY BASED ON RELIGIOUS DOCTRINE OR ECCLESIASTICAL DUTIES

Transcending the facts of this case, the second issue asks whether this Court “should recognize a breach of fiduciary duty claim, arising from a clergy member’s alleged inappropriate sexual conduct with a congregant?” Order at 3. For several reasons, it should not.

A. Imposing a Secular Fiduciary Relationship Based on Religious Facts Violates the First Amendment

First Amendment entanglement problems bedevil any effort to cast clerics and congregants in a fiduciary relationship, because it compels the court to review and weigh the religious doctrines and practices that form and shape the alleged relationship. As the court in H.R.B. v. J.L.G. explained, a breach of fiduciary duty claim “inevitably require[s] inquiry into the religious aspects of the [clergyman-parishioner] relationship” in order to establish “the duty owed by [a clergyman] to [his or her] parishioners”). 913 S.W.2d at 99. The nature of relationships between clerics and congregants varies greatly depending on religious doctrines and teachings: different faiths understand clergy in radically different ways, from consecrated intermediary with God to fellow believer. Hence, “it is impossible to show the existence of a fiduciary relationship [in clergyman-parishioner cases] without resort to decided on neutral legal principles.” Vione v. Tewell, 820 N.Y.S.2d 682, 685 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2006).

<sup>3</sup> See Nally v. Grace Community Church of the Valley, 763 P.2d 948, 960 (Cal. 1988) (rejecting a claim of clergy malpractice because imposing a duty of care on pastoral counselors “would necessarily be intertwined with the religious philosophy of the particular denomination or ecclesiastical teachings of the religious entity”); Baumgartner v. First Church of Christ Scientist, 490 N.E.2d 1319, 1324 (Ill. App.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 915 (1986) (holding that “adjudication of the present case would require the court to extensively investigate and evaluate religious tenets and doctrines” and that “the first amendment precludes such an intrusive inquiry by the civil courts into religious matters”).

1 religious facts.” Langford v. Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn, 677 N.Y.S.2d 436, 2 439 (N.Y. 1998) (rejecting fiduciary duty claim).

3 This case illustrates the problem. Adjudicating Ramani’s breach of fiduciary 4 duty claims would unavoidably entangle the court in religious inquiries. As her own 5 allegations make clear, “[r]eligion was not merely incidental to [Ramani’s] 6 relationship with [Rabbi Harlig and Rabbi Schanowitz]; it was the foundation for it.” 7 H.R.B., 913 S.W.2d at 99 (emphasis added); see Br. App. 17. Deciding whether the 8 respondents owed Ramani fiduciary duties covering the range of wrongs she alleges 9 would require the Court to examine the nature of an ecclesiastical relationship. This 10 in turn would require judicial examination of the religious beliefs, doctrines, and 11 ecclesiastical canons constituting that relationship—in sharp defiance of the First 12 Amendment. See Jones, 443 U.S. at 605 (Constitution prohibits courts from 13 undertaking “an analysis or examination of ecclesiastical polity or doctrine in settling 14 [civil] disputes”).

15 B. Imposing a Legal Standard of Care that Clerics
16 Owe to Congregants Violates the First Amendment

17 Because a fiduciary is “one who owes a duty to another by virtue of the 18 fiduciary relationship,” Stalk v. Mushkin, 199 P.3d 838, 843 (Nev. 2009), a claim 19 against a church or cleric for breach of fiduciary duty will require the Court to decide 20 what duties are owed a parishioner. This too violates the First Amendment.

21 Imposing fiduciary duties based on church-defined ecclesiastical standards is 22 simply a prohibited claim for clergy malpractice by another name. See Dausch v.
23 Rykse, 52 F.3d 1425, 1428-29 (7th Cir. 1994) (per curiam) (affirming the district 24 court’s rejection of a fiduciary duty claim as “an elliptical way to state a clergy 25 malpractice claim”); Schieffer v. Catholic Archdiocese of Omaha, 508 N.W.2d 907, 26 912 (Neb. 1993). Using tort law to enforce religious leaders’ compliance with their 27 own churches’ ecclesiastical standards would unconstitutionally displace churches as 28 custodians of their own affairs, violating the right of churches “to decide for

1 themselves, free from state interference, matters of church government as well as 2 those of faith and doctrine.” Kedroff, 344 U.S. at 116.

3       Imposing a state-defined standard of care on clergy members for their acts and 4 omissions as clergy infringes on the First Amendment rights of clergy and churches
5 no less profoundly. Dictating how clergy members must relate to their congregants 6 would unconstitutionally impose a secular orthodoxy on churches. West Virginia
7 State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642 (1943) (Constitution denies 8 government authority “to prescribe what shall be orthodox in ... religion”). Clergy do 9 not owe fiduciary duties to congregants merely by virtue of being clergy; their 10 religious duties do not give rise to legal ones, and the State simply has no authority to 11 decree ecclesiastical duties and then punish clergy who fail to live up to them. See 12 Petrell v. Shaw, 902 N.E.2d 401, 407 (Mass. 2009) (rejecting a claim of fiduciary 13 duty, in part, because the relationship between the claimant and the church authorities 14 “was based on no more than their shared religious affiliation” that “provides no basis 15 to support liability in a civil context”).

16       Forcing a single secular standard of care on clergy (or churches) to govern their 17 relations with congregants risks the irreparable erosion of the constitutionally 18 protected autonomy of churches and, in time, the transfer of control over ecclesiastical 19 affairs to the state. McClure v. Salvation Army, 460 F.2d 553, 560 (5th Cir.), cert.
20 denied, 409 U.S. 896 (1972) (reasoning that “if a state can second-guess religious 21 policy, procedure, or action by requiring a church to meet secular standards of ‘care, 22 the state will effectively control the religious organization and its operations by threat 23 of tort litigation and liability.”).

24       Moreover, the very notion of a fiduciary relationship giving rise to secular 25 duties of care ignores the complex realities of the relationship between a cleric or 26 church and a member of the faith. A rabbi, priest, or bishop owes duties to a 27 congregant by virtue of religious doctrines, vows, commitments, and understandings, 28 not “by virtue of the fiduciary relationship.” Stalk, 199 P.3d at 843. Casting that

1 relationship as a legal one imposes an ill-fitting secular framework on a religious 2 relationship. To take just one problem, a basic legal obligation of a fiduciary is to be 3 loyal. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TRUSTS § 170 (1959). Indeed, Nevada law 4 imposes on at least some fiduciaries the duty of “undivided loyalty.” Leavitt v.
5 Leisure Sports Inc., 103 Nev. 81, 92, 734 P.2d 1221, 1228 (1987) (discussing the 6 duties owed by officers and directors to a corporation). Yet the loyalty of a cleric is 7 often divided—and legitimately so. A religious leader bears duties to his or her 8 church and flock as a whole, within terms prescribed and understood by religious 9 doctrine and personal commitment or vow. Making a cleric legally responsible to act 10 in the best interest of a single congregant—or to comply with other aspects of a 11 fiduciary duty—would unconstitutionally force the cleric to abandon his or her most 12 sacred obligations to avoid civil liability.

13 C. A Person Who Is Both a Clergy Member and a Secular Professional 14 Can Be Held Liable for Breach of Fiduciary Duties Arising Out of 15 His Role as a Professional But Not for Duties Allegedly Arising Out
16 of His Role as a Clergy Member

17 A person can be a member of the clergy within his or her church while still 18 having a full and unrelated career as a secular professional. In the LDS Church, 19 clergy (bishops and stake presidents) are unpaid and have full-time jobs in their 20 chosen secular vocations. LDS clergy are often doctors, dentists, lawyers, 21 accountants, and so forth in their professional lives. Some work and hold professional 22 credentials in areas such as psychology and social work.

23 A person who has both the status of clergy within a church and also the status 24 of a secular professional will often not be acting as a religious leader. In determining 25 whether a fiduciary duty exists, therefore, it is critical for courts to first determine 26 which “hat” the person was wearing—clerical or professional—when the alleged tort 27 was committed. Courts have recognized the propriety of imposing a fiduciary duty 28 when such a person engages in sexual misconduct while acting in a professional

1 secular capacity rather than in a religious capacity.<sup>4</sup> Some courts have also allowed 2 secular claims for breach of fiduciary duty against a person who is a clergy member 3 when the religious elements of the relationship have been essentially vitiated due to 4 sexual exploitation. See H.R.B., 913 S.W.2d at 98. But the key is that religious 5 counseling and the clergy-parishioner relationship do not create a fiduciary duty. For 6 such a duty to exist, the person must be acting in a secular professional capacity. No 7 claim for breach of fiduciary duty can arise out of religious facts.

8       The leading case on this point is Nally v. Grace Community Church of the 9 Valley. There the California Supreme Court rejected a claim of negligence against a 10 clergyman for allegedly failing to warn parents of the mental state of their son who 11 committed suicide after receiving religious counseling. The court explained that 12 “[b]ecause of the differing theological views espoused by the myriad of religions in 13 our state and practiced by church members, it would certainly be impractical, and 14 quite possibly unconstitutional, to impose a duty of care on pastoral counselors. Such 15 a duty would necessarily be intertwined with the religious philosophy of the particular 16 denomination or ecclesiastical teachings of the religious entity. 763 P.2d at 960 17 (emphasis added). California courts continue to avoid holding clergymen liable based 18 on religious counseling alone, even when the cleric allegedly had a sexual relationship 19 with a congregant.<sup>5</sup>

21 <sup>4</sup>Marmelstein v. Kehillat New Hempstead, 892 N.E.2d 375, 376, 379 (N.Y. 2008), (a 22 cleric who is also a licensed professional may be held liable for breach of fiduciary 23 duty “under existing laws and secular standards that govern the practice of those 24 professions”); Sanders v. Baucum, 929 F.Supp. 1028, 1034 (N.D. Tex. 1996) (“if a 25 clergyperson holds himself out as having the skill and experience of a secular 26 professional and undertakes to provide a secular service, he can be held to the same 27 secular standard of care by which secular professionals are held under similar 28 circumstances”).

26 <sup>5</sup>Jacqueline R. v. Household of Faith Family Church, Inc., 118 Cal.Rptr.2d 264, 265 27 (Cal. Ct. App. 2002) (no tort liability for pastor accused of affair with congregant in 28 the course of pastoral counseling because counseling was religious and uncompensated and because “Nally precludes [the court] from holding the pastor to

1 Other courts have been equally unwilling to entertain breach of fiduciary duty 2 claims against clergy based on sexual relationships that arise in the course of pastoral 3 counseling.<sup>6</sup> Again, the key principle animating these decisions is that religious 4 relationships standing alone do not create secular fiduciary duties. See Petrell, 902 5 N.E.2d at 407 (rejecting a claim of fiduciary duty, in part, because the religious 6 relationship between the claimant and the church authorities “provides no basis to 7 support liability in a civil context”).

8 By contrast, a duty may arise when a person who is a clergyman and also a 9 professional therapist offers his secular expertise to a congregant. The person may 10 then be held liable for breaching his fiduciary duty as a professional under the same 11 secular standard of care that governs other similarly licensed professionals. Because 12 the relationship is secular and professional, not religious, it is subject to civil court 13 review under secular professional standards. See, e.g., Sanders v. Casa View Baptist 14 Church, 134 F.3d 331, 334, 338 (5th Cir. 1998) (First Amendment did not shield a

15
16 the same standard of care applicable to a licensed marriage counselor”); Richelle v.
17 Roman Catholic Archbishop, 130 Cal.Rptr.2d 601, 618 (Cal. Ct. App. 2003) (priest 18 accused of a sexual relationship with a congregant held not liable for the breach of 19 fiduciary duty, because her “claim of vulnerability rest[ed] solely on her ‘deeply 20 religious nature’” and determining how far she was “vulnerable to [the priest] and 21 unable to protect herself effectively” presented “profoundly religious questions, as to 22 which the courts may not constitutionally inquire”).

23 <sup>6</sup>See Marmelstein, 892 N.E.2d at 376 & 379 (denying that a rabbi owed a fiduciary 24 duty to a female synagogue member whom he had allegedly tricked into entering a 25 sexual relationship during their religious counseling sessions, because “[a]llegations 26 that give rise to only a general clergy-congregant relationship that includes aspects of 27 counseling do not generally impose a fiduciary obligation upon a cleric”); Doe v.
28 Roman Catholic Diocese of Rochester, 907 N.E.2d 683, 684 (N.Y. 2009) (following Marmelstein in reversing a lower court decision because the congregant made only bare allegations that the priest occupied a position of control or dominance and that she was uniquely vulnerable). In contrast, at least one court has staked out the highly debatable position that a fiduciary duty exists solely because the defendant was the plaintiff’s priest. Erickson v. Christenson, 781 P.2d 383, 386 (Or. Ct. App. 1989) (“plaintiff’s claim for outrageous conduct is not premised on the mere fact that Christenson is a pastor, but on the fact that, because he was plaintiff’s pastor and counselor, a special relationship of trust and confidence developed”).

1 minister from liability for damages arising from sexual affairs with two church 2 employees when he had “represented that he was qualified by education and 3 experience to provide marriage counseling”).

4 Nevertheless, in exercising their vital gatekeeper function courts must take great 5 care not to impose a fiduciary duty just because a person is both a clergyman and has 6 professional training as a counselor. The issue is whether the person was acting as a 7 professional counselor or as a clergyman. If the former, a fiduciary relationship might 8 arise. See Vione, 820 N.Y.S.2d at 686 (finding a fiduciary relationship because the 9 minister held himself out as a marriage counselor and did not merely “engage[ ] in a 10 consensual sexual relationship while acting as a spiritual adviser.”). But if any 11 substantial portion of the relationship was religious, no liability should attach even if 12 secular professional standards were violated. See Westbrook v. Penley, 231 S.W.3d 13 389, 391 (Tex. 2007) (pastor licensed as a professional marriage counselor held not 14 liable for disclosing a congregant’s extramarital affair to the church as required by 15 religious doctrine, because “parsing those roles for purposes of determining civil 16 liability in this case, where health or safety are not at issue, would unconstitutionally 17 entangle the court in matters of church governance and impinge on the core religious 18 function of church discipline”).

19 D. Serious Cases of Sexual Misconduct by Clergy are Better Remedied
20 Through Claims for Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

21 Victims of sexual misconduct by clergy are not without a remedy. Violent 22 misconduct, of course, gives rise to civil claims like assault and battery and to 23 criminal charges, like those of which Cantor Segelstein was convicted for his attack 24 on Ramani. See Br. App. 2. In nonviolent cases involving sexual misconduct by a 25 clergyman, the right answer is not to shoehorn the clergy/congregant relationship into 26 the constitutionally infirm and doctrinally inapposite category of fiduciary duty, but 27 instead to recognize a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress.
28

1 In Nevada, “the elements of this cause of action are (1) extreme and outrageous 2 conduct with either the intention of, or reckless disregard for, causing emotional 3 distress, (2) the plaintiff’s having suffered severe or extreme emotional distress and 4 (3) actual or proximate causation.” Star v. Rabello, 97 Nev. 124, 125, 625 P.2d 90, 91-5 92 (1981) (citations omitted). This Court has already held that “improper sexual 6 conduct” can be “extreme and outrageous.” Id. at 92. Ordinary sexual relationships 7 between adults presumably would not be sufficiently outrageous to impose liability, 8 whereas truly exploitative or oppressive actions by a clergy member against a 9 congregant would. See Marmelstein, 892 N.E.2d at 379 & n.4.

10 This approach avoids serious constitutional problems associated with imposing 11 secular fiduciary duties on clergy (a court would have no need to inquire into religious 12 doctrine or establish religious duties, for example), while still providing relief in 13 egregious cases of clergy misconduct.<sup>7</sup>

14 III.

15 CHURCHES AND RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS ARE NOT LIABLE FOR SEXUAL 16 OR INTENTIONAL TORTS COMMITTED BY AGENTS AND VOLUNTEERS

17 The third issue asks whether this Court should “recognize that a church can be 18 held vicariously liable for a clergy member’s improper sexual conduct with a 19 congregant.” Order at 3. The answer is no: as a matter of law, such conduct is outside 20 the scope of employment and therefore beyond recovery under the theory of vicarious 21 liability.

22 By statute, employers are not vicariously liable for the misconduct of their 23 employees “if the conduct of the employee . . . (a) [w]as a truly independent venture 24 of the employee; (b) [w]as not committed in the course of the very task assigned to the 25

26 <sup>7</sup>Of course, as explained next, a clergyman acts far outside the scope of his agency if 27 he engages in the sort of extreme and outrageous conduct necessary for a claim of 28 intentional infliction of emotional distress.

1 employee; and (c) [w]as not reasonably foreseeable under the facts and circumstances 2 of the case considering the nature and scope of his employment.” NRS 41.745.

3 Nevada’s leading case on vicarious liability is Wood v. Safeway, 121 Nev. 724, 4 121 P.3d 1026 (2005). There a mentally disabled woman brought claims against a 5 janitorial company and its employee for sexual assaults that allegedly occurred at a 6 grocery store where she was employed and he worked as a night janitor. Id. at 1028-7 29. The Court denied vicarious liability, holding that the janitor “was not acting on 8 behalf of Action Cleaning when he assaulted Doe, or out of any sense of duty owed to 9 Action Cleaning.” Id. at 1037. The Court found that “[t]he sexual assault was also 10 not committed in the course of the tasks assigned to [Ronquillo-Nino] as a janitor.” 11 Id. at 1039. And it held that his assaults were not reasonably foreseeable because he 12 had no criminal record and the company had received no complaints of sexual 13 harassment regarding him or any other employee during the previous decade. Id.

14 Whether a church should be held vicariously liable for the sexual misconduct of 15 its clergy presents an issue of first impression in Nevada, but neither the statutory 16 standard under NRS 41.745 nor its explication in Wood remotely supports doing so.
17 And cases from across the country overwhelmingly hold that as a matter of law sexual 18 torts committed by clergy are not within the scope of their employment.<sup>8</sup> This Court 19 should so hold.

21 <sup>8</sup>See, e.g., Tichenor v. Roman Catholic Church of the Archdiocese of New Orleans, 32
22 F.3d 953, 960 (5th Cir. 1994) (“It would be hard to imagine a more difficult argument 23 than that [the priest’s] illicit sexual pursuits were somehow related to his duties as a 24 priest or that they in any way furthered the interests of St. Rita’s, his employer ...
25 given [his] vow of celibacy and the Catholic Church’s unbending stand condemning 26 homosexual relations ....”); Byrd v. Faber, 565 N.E.2d 584, 588 (Ohio 1991) (“The 27 Seventh-day Adventist organization in no way promotes or advocates nonconsensual 28 sexual conduct between pastors and parishioners [and] did not hire [the pastor] to rape, seduce, or otherwise physically assault members of his congregation.”);
Rita M. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop, 232 Cal.Rptr. 685, 690 (Cal. Ct. App. 1987)
 (“It would defy every notion of logic and fairness to say that sexual activity between a priest and a parishioner is characteristic of the Archbishop of the Roman Catholic

1 As stated, the LDS Church roundly condemns sexual exploitation by clergy in 2 any form. Any illicit sexual relationship between a clergyman and congregant is “a 3 truly independent venture of the employee.” NRS 41.745(a). Indeed, such a 4 relationship is condemned as sinful and contrary to God’s will by virtually all 5 religions, and a clergy member who exploits his office to victimize a congregant does 6 not act for the religious organization or out of a duty toward it. See Wood, 121 Nev. at 7 739, 121 P.3d at 1039. Such acts are never “in the course of the very task assigned to 8 the employee.” NRS 41.745(b).

9 The sexual misconduct of unpaid church volunteers likewise falls outside the 10 scope of any agency relationship. California courts hold in the context of claims 11 against churches the rules governing vicarious liability apply “the same for both 12 unpaid volunteers and paid employees,” though of course the scope of an unpaid 13 volunteer’s agency is often extremely narrow.<sup>9</sup> Jeffrey Scott E. v. Central Baptist 14 Church, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128, 130 n.6 (Cal. App. 1988). As with paid clergy, sexual 15 misconduct lies far outside the scope of a church volunteer’s agency. Indeed, 16 intentionally tortious conduct in general should rarely if ever be deemed within the 17 scope of a volunteer’s agency for a church. See id. at 130 (sexual abuse by Sunday 18 school teacher); Juarez v. Boy Scouts of Am., Inc., 97 Cal. Rptr.2d 12, (Cal. Ct. App.
19 2000) (sexual abuse by scoutmaster).

24 issue, holding that sexual abuse can sometimes fall within the scope of a clergy 25 member’s employment. See JC2 v. Grammond, 232 F.Supp.2d 1166, 1170 (D. Or.
26 2002).

1 This Court also should be cautious about allowing churches to be held 2 vicariously liable for their volunteers in cases of ordinary negligence. Religious 3 organizations have historically provided invaluable volunteer services to their 4 communities in myriad ways, from soup kitchens and disaster relief to direct financial 5 assistance to the poor. Yet their resources are limited. They will be far less likely to 6 provide such services if they risk being held liable for every tort of their volunteers.
7 This concern is acute for the LDS Church, whose religious doctrine and ecclesiastical 8 practice dictate that nearly every adult member shoulder volunteer religious 9 responsibilities and engage in ministry of some sort. Such organizations would face 10 intolerable burdens if the law left any doubt that vicarious liability is limited to non-11 intentional torts committed within the precise scope of any alleged volunteer agency.

12 In all events, this Court should not hold religious organizations vicariously 13 liable for the sexual misconduct of clergy or unpaid volunteers.

15 THE FIRST AMENDMENT BARS OR LIMITS CLAIMS AGAINST 16 A CHURCH FOR NEGLIGENT HIRING, RETENTION, OR SUPERVISION OF A CLERGY MEMBER OR UNPAID VOLUNTEER

17 Lastly, the Court directed briefing on whether, “under Nevada law . . . a claim 18 for negligent hiring, supervision, or retention of a clergy member or an unpaid 19 volunteer, who engages in tortious conduct, exist[s] against a church?” Order at 3. To 20 the extent this Court intended to limit the inquiry to Nevada law, the short answer is 21 that no such claims have been recognized against churches in the decisions of this 22 Court. Notably, Ramani’s brief fails to cite a single supporting example from Nevada 23 case law. More broadly, the First Amendment would bar or severely limit such claims 24 in most circumstances because they excessively entangle the courts with ecclesiastical 25 issues.

26

1           A.    The First Amendment Bars a Claim Against a Church for the 2                   Negligent Hiring or Retention of a Clergy Member or Volunteer 3                   Who Performs Spiritual Functions Within a Church

4           In Nevada, “[t]he tort of negligent hiring imposes a general duty on the 5 employer to conduct a reasonable background check on a potential employee to ensure 6 that the employee is fit for the position.” Burnett v. C.B.A. Security Service, Inc., 107 7 Nev. 787, 789, 820 P.2d 750, 751 (1991) (per curiam). This Court has explained that 8 “[a]n employer breaches this duty when it hires an employee even though the 9 employer knew, or should have known, of that employee’s dangerous propensities.” 10 Hall v. SSF, Inc., 112 Nev. 1384, 1392, 930 P.2d 94, 98, 99 (1996). Whether the 11 employer conducted a reasonable background check is the central inquiry in negligent 12 hiring cases. In Burnett, this Court held that a security firm was not liable for the 13 negligent hiring of a security guard who stole an apartment tenant’s car and got into 14 an accident, because neither of two separate background investigations “revealed any 15 indication that [the guard] would use his position to misappropriate a motor vehicle”.
16 820 P.2d at 751.

17           Similarly, a cause of action for negligent retention turns on the employer’s 18 “duty to use reasonable care ... to make sure that the employees are fit for their 19 positions.” Hall, 930 P.2d at 99 (citing 27 Am.Jur.2d Employment Relationship §§ 20 475-76 (1996)). No reported case in Nevada has applied these standards to claims 21 against churches for the alleged misconduct of their clergy or unpaid volunteers.
22 Imposing on churches the secular requirement of a reasonable background check 23 when selecting clergy or volunteers or the related duty of “mak[ing] sure that [clergy] 24 are fit for their positions” (id.) would contravene the First Amendment.<sup>10</sup>

25 _____
26 <sup>10</sup>A few courts have ruled to the contrary, finding the First Amendment inapplicable 27 when upholding claims of negligent hiring and supervision. See Malicki v. Doe, 815 28 So.2d 347, 364 (Fla. 2002) (footnote omitted); Moses v. Diocese, 863 P.2d 310, 323 n.15 (Colo. 1993). Such decisions ignore the majority understanding, set forth below, that civil courts cannot constitutionally regulate the selection of clergy.

1 As established, the First Amendment’s guarantee of autonomy for religious 2 organizations—“an independence from secular control or manipulation,” Kedroff, 344 3 U.S. at 116—leaves churches free “to determine what the essential qualifications of 4 [clergy] are and whether the candidate possesses them.” Gonzalez v. Roman Catholic 5 Archbishop, 280 U.S. 1, 19 (1929). Indeed, “[t]he relationship between an organized 6 church and its ministers” — how they are selected, trained, supervised, and released 7 — is the “lifeblood” of a church and thus a matter of “prime ecclesiastical concern.” 8 McClure, 460 F.2d at 558-59. Legislation or judicial decisions that regulate “the 9 appointment of clergy” unambiguously infringe on a church’s religious liberty.
10 Kedroff, 344 U.S. at 107. In short, the right of a religious organization to select its 11 own clergy “must now be said to have federal constitutional protection as a part of the 12 free exercise of religion against state interference.” Id. at 116; see Ayon v. Gourley, 13 47 F.Supp.2d 1246, 1250 (D. Colo. 1998), aff’d 185 F.3d 873 (10th Cir. 1999) (“The 14 choice of individuals to serve as ministers is one of the most fundamental rights 15 belonging to a religious institution.”); Isely v. Capuchin Province, 880 F.Supp. 1138, 16 1150 (E.D. Mich. 1995) (“[A]ny inquiry into the decision of who should be permitted 17 to become or remain a priest necessarily would involve prohibited excessive 18 entanglement with religion.”).

19 This constitutional liberty to select clergy free from secular control is the 20 animating principle behind the ministerial exception cases. Courts have widely held 21 that a religious organization’s decisions about clergy selection and retention—choices 22 of “who would perform spiritual functions and about how those functions would be 23 divided”—are exempt from legal challenge under federal civil rights laws and 24 common law tort actions. Petruska v. Gannon University, 462 F.3d 294, 307-08 (3d 25 Cir. 2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 903 (2007) (dismissing a female chaplain’s Title VII 26 claims for gender discrimination and retaliation for opposing sexual harassment 27
28

1 against a private Catholic university because the decision to restructure university 2 leadership and demote her fell within the ministerial exception).<sup>11</sup>

3 Holding a religious organization liable for negligently hiring or retaining the 4 cleric of its choice is unconstitutional, no matter how unreasonable that decision 5 appears to a civil court or jury. A civil court has no standards to second-guess whom 6 a church selects to be the “lifeblood” of its faith community. Who is appointed to 7 preach the Word or mediate between God and the faithful are inescapably religious 8 questions. As the Wisconsin Supreme Court has held, “the First Amendment to the 9 United States Constitution prevents the courts of this state from determining what 10 makes one competent to serve as a Catholic priest since such a determination would 11 require interpretation of church canons and internal church policies and practices.”
12 Pritzlaff v. Archdiocese of Milwaukee, 533 N.W.2d 780, 790 (Wis. 1995).

13 Additionally, adjudicating negligent hiring and retention claims against 14 churches for the employment of clergy is impermissible because a civil court cannot 15 inquire into “matters of discipline, faith, internal organization, or ecclesiastical rule, 16 custom, or law.” Serbian E. Orthodox Diocese, 426 U.S. at 713; NLRB v. Catholic 17 Bishop of Chicago, 440 U.S. 490, 502 (1979) (the “very process of inquiry” can 18 “impinge upon rights guaranteed by the Religion Clauses”). And yet a negligence 19 standard “must make proper allowance for ... the circumstances under which [the 20 defendant] must act.” W. Page Keeton et al, Prosser and Keeton on The Law of Torts 21 § 32, p. 174 (1984). A church’s polity and doctrinal beliefs are among the unique 22 factual “circumstances” that—as a matter of tort law—would ordinarily be essential to

23
24 <sup>11</sup>See Gunn v. Mariners Church, Inc., 167 Cal. App. 4th 206, 217 (Cal. Ct. App. 2008) 25 (holding that the ministerial exception applied to a church leader’s announcement in a 26 church meeting that a former worship director had been dismissed for homosexuality); 27 Bryce v. Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Colorado, 289 F.3d 648, 656 (10th Cir.
28 2002) (the ministerial exception to Title VII employment discrimination cases arises from the constitutional principle of church autonomy: “The right to choose ministers is an important part of internal church governance and can be essential to the well-

1 consider when deciding whether a church (considered as an entire congregation or as a 2 single leader or officer) acted reasonably in hiring and retaining a given member of 3 the clergy.

4 But such an inquiry inevitably leads the court into constitutionally prohibited 5 inquiries concerning religious belief and church government, which explains why 6 even adjudicating a claim against a church for the negligent hiring or retention clergy
7 is unconstitutional. See Gibson v. Brewer, 952 S.W.2d 239, 246-47 (Mo. 1997) 8 (holding that adjudication of claims for negligent hiring, training, supervision, and 9 retention of clergy “necessarily involve interpretation of religious doctrine, policy, and 10 administration,” which creates “excessive entanglement between church and state 11 [and] has the effect of inhibiting religion, in violation of the First Amendment”).

12 The same bar on adjudication holds for employees holding unordained offices 13 and unpaid volunteers who perform spiritually significant functions within a church.<sup>12</sup> 14 Hence, an action for negligent hiring or retention should not lie against a church based 15 on the actions of a volunteer responsible for selecting worship music or teaching Bible 16 study. By contrast, such a claim might well lie against a church where an employee or 17 volunteer is engaged solely to perform secular functions, such as mowing the chapel 18 lawn.

19 One might argue that the need to delve into religious doctrine would be reduced 20 if a court dictated a single secular standard governing church hiring and retention 21 being of a church”).

22 <sup>12</sup> See Petruska, 462 F.3d at 307-08 (the ministerial exception applies to the selection 23 and retention of those who perform “spiritual functions”); EEOC v. Roman Catholic 24 Diocese of Raleigh, 213 F.3d 795, 805 (4th Cir. 2000) (“the functions of the music 25 ministry and music teaching positions in this case are integral to the spiritual and 26 pastoral mission of Sacred Heart Cathedral”); Catholic Univ. of Am., 83 F.3d at 465 27 (“employment as a tenured member of the Department of Canon Law so clearly meets 28 the ministerial function test”); (“Rayburn v. General Conference of Seventh Day Adventists, 772 F.2d 1164, 1168 (4th Cir. 1985) (the unordained office of associate in pastoral care “so embodies the basic purpose of the religious institution that state scrutiny of the process for filling the position would raise constitutional problems”).

1 decisions. But as with defining the fiduciary duties of clerics, dictating church 2 employment standards would only deepen the unconstitutionality because the 3 government has no power “to prescribe what shall be orthodox in ... religion.”
4 Barnette, 319 U.S. at 642. A government standard likely would favor bureaucratic 5 approaches to clergy oversight, thereby privileging hierarchical (or at least highly 6 organized) church polities over congregational or less structured ones. This “would 7 result in an endorsement of religion, by approving one model for church hiring, 8 ordination, and retention of clergy” over others – a plainly unconstitutional result.
9 Gibson, 952 S.W.2d at 247.

10 In sum, the Court should reject any claim seeking to hold a church liable for the 11 negligent hiring or retention of its clergy or spiritual volunteers.

12 B. The First Amendment Bars a Claim Against a Church for the 13 Negligent Supervision of a Clergy Member or Unpaid Volunteer, but 14 May Permit a Claim for Intentional Failure to Supervise If the Church Disregards a Known Risk of Harm

15 Because it is based on notions of secular duty, a standard claim of negligent 16 supervision of clergy or spiritually significant volunteers unconstitutionally intrudes 17 on ecclesiastical matters no less than any other negligence-based claim. Courts have 18 held that “[t]he imposition of secular duties and liability on the church [for negligent 19 supervision of clergy] ... will infringe upon its right to determine the standards 20 governing the relationship between the church, its bishop, and the parish priest. . . .

21 Because of the existence of these constitutionally protected beliefs governing 22 ecclesiastical relationships, clergy members cannot be treated in law as though they 23 were common law employees.” Swanson v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Portland, 24 692 A.2d 441, 445 (Me. 1997).

25 Nevertheless, in some circumstances a narrowly crafted claim against a church 26 for failing to supervise its clergy can be appropriate. The Missouri Supreme Court’s 27 reasoning in Gibson, 952 S.W.2d at 239, provides a constitutionally sensitive 28 approach by distinguishing between negligent supervision and intentional failure to 1 supervise. Presented there were claims, among others, against a Catholic diocese for 2 negligently supervising a priest accused of abuse. See id. at 243, 247. The court 3 discerned that “[a]djudicating the reasonableness of a church’s supervision of a 4 cleric—what the church ‘should know’—requires inquiry into religious doctrine.” Id.

5 Concluding that such an inquiry “would create an excessive entanglement, inhibit 6 religion, and result in the endorsement of one model of supervision,” the court 7 declined to apply a claim of negligent supervision against the diocese for the priest’s 8 alleged misconduct. Id. at 247.<sup>13</sup>

9 The court distinguished a claim of negligent supervision from a church’s 10 intentional failure to supervise a clergyman, noting that the latter “does not offend the 11 First Amendment.” Id. at 248. Such a claim exists if “(1) a supervisor (or 12 supervisors) exists (2) the supervisor (or supervisors) knew that harm was certain or 13 substantially certain to result, (3) the supervisor (or supervisors) disregarded this 14 known risk, (4) the supervisor’s inaction caused damage, and (5) the other 15 requirements of the RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 317 are met.” Id.

16 Most critically, section 317 of the Restatement requires the plaintiff to prove 17 that the master “knows or has reason to know that he has the ability to control his 18 servant, and knows or should know of the necessity and opportunity for exercising 19 such control.” RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 317 (emphasis added).<sup>14</sup> This is 20

21 <sup>13</sup>Imposing a standard of care that holds a church liable if it “should have known” 22 about the tortious propensities of mere volunteers would subject religious 23 organizations like the LDS Church to virtually unlimited liability. As described 24 above, it relies on the volunteer services of nearly every willing adult member to carry 25 out its ministerial and charitable missions. Other religious organizations rely on 26 member volunteers in similar ways. Imputing to such groups constructive notice of the background and character of virtually every adult member, and then holding them liable for allegedly failing to adequately monitor such members, would impose a crushing and unconstitutional burden on the exercise of religion.

27 <sup>14</sup>In setting forth these elements, the Gibson Court explained that this cause of action 28 requires proof that a church had a supervisor responsible for the person accused of tortious conduct, but that the First Amendment does not permit a court to inquire

1 an actual knowledge standard. Because the victim and his parents in Gibson “alleged 2 that the Diocese knew that harm was certain or substantially certain to result from its 3 failure to supervise [the priest],” the court reversed the trial court’s dismissal of their 4 claim. Id.

5 Gibson’s distinction between impermissible claims of negligent supervision on 6 the one hand and, on the other, claims for intentional failure to supervise in the face of 7 actual knowledge of danger strikes a proper balance. It permits relief in egregious 8 failure-to-supervise cases while avoiding constitutionally forbidden inquiries into 9 religious belief, church government, and what ecclesiastical leaders “should have 10 known” in the conduct of their religious duties. This Court should adopt the Gibson 11 standard for claims against churches alleging failure to supervise.

12 CONCLUSION

13 For the foregoing reasons, we urge this Court to answer the questions in its 14 Order as set forth above and, accordingly, to reject Ramani’s claims, and to affirm the 15 district court’s grant of summary judgment.
